5. Subsequent to beginning coursework at that school, the Debtor learned that the school had lost its accreditation and that none of its recent graduates had obtained the employment for which they were trained due to that loss.

6. The Debtor was unable to transfer to any other educational program, and was also refused any refund of the tuition paid by the student loan.

7. Since that time, the Debtor has been unemployed, and the sole source of income for herself and her two children has been public assistance in the amount of $[amount], which barely suffices for the necessities of life.

³⁰⁸ Both debtors and creditors may seek determinations with respect to the dischargeability of debts, either during or after the bankruptcy (however, there are deadlines for certain creditor complaints; see Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4007(c); 11 U.S.C. § 523(c)). Such determinations must be sought by way of adversary proceedings. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7001. For a discussion of complaints in adversary proceedings see notes to Form 100, Appx. G.10, supra.

Debtors may want such determinations to settle an issue likely to be disputed later, or to obtain an explicit court order enjoining a creditor with whom difficulties are anticipated.

³⁰⁹ If the student loan creditor is a governmental entity that may claim Eleventh Amendment immunity, it had previously been desirable to sue named individual officials rather than the entity itself. See Ex Parte Young, 209 U.S. 123, 28 S. Ct. 441, 52 L. Ed. 714 (1908). This procedure is no longer necessary as the Supreme Court's decision in Tennessee Student Assistance Corp. v. Hood, 541 U.S. 440, 124 S. Ct. 1905, 158 L. Ed. 2d 764 (2004), now clearly establishes that the debtor may sue the state directly when seeking a dischargeability determination.

naming the head of the relevant agency may still be useful for other purposes.
